

REVOCABLE LIVING TRUST

FAQS

What is a Revocable Living Trust?

A Revocable Living Trust is a legal document drafted during your lifetime that states how you want your assets managed and distributed upon your death, or in the event of your incapacity. Trusts help avoid probate, conservatorship proceedings, and maintain post-death control of assets.

What is probate?

Probate is the court-supervised process of administering a deceased person's estate in absence of a trust. This generally involves collecting a deceased person's assets, paying debts, taxes and then distributing remaining assets to heirs. Probate varies by state and even county to county, but certain things are universally true.

- Probate is a public process with wills (if there is one) and heirs listed for anyone to access or solicit.
- Most jurisdictions have lengthy wait times before distributing your money to heirs/beneficiaries.
- While court fees and probate taxes are generally reasonable, they can erode the amount your loved ones receive from your estate.

How is a trust different from a will?

While a will can be an important estate-planning tool, its power only takes effect upon death. A trust, on the other hand, allows your back-up trustee to carry out your wishes in the event of your death or incapacity, including illness.

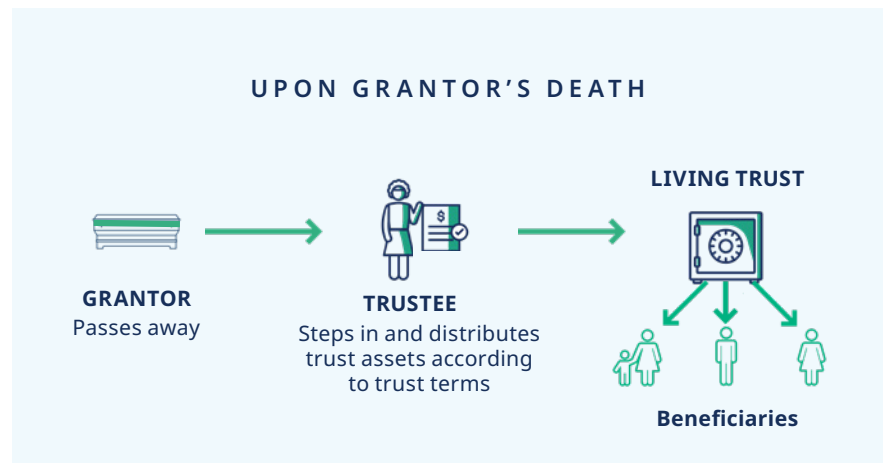

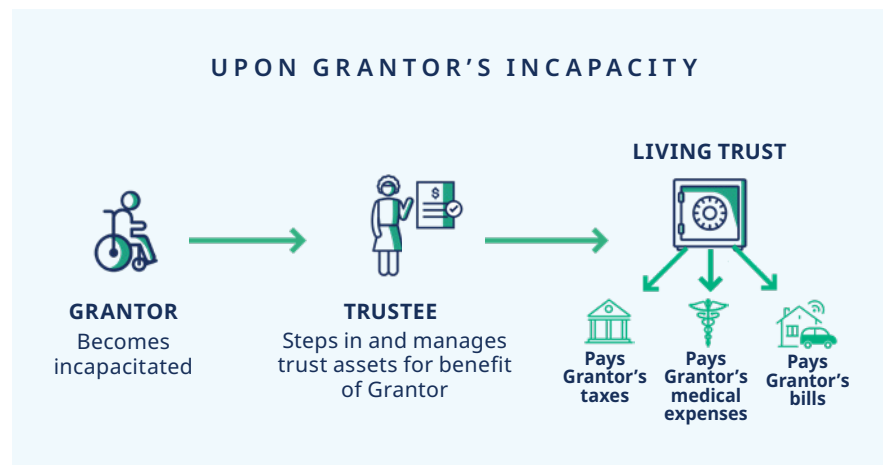

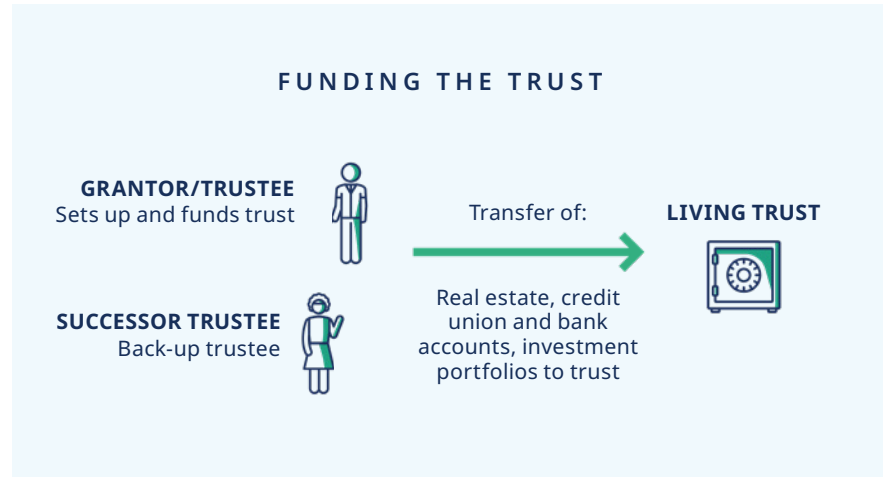

Why is it important to plan ahead for incapacity?

Without a plan in place, the court will appoint an individual (“guardian” or “conservator”) to act on your behalf, if you are no longer able to handle your own affairs.

What are the steps involved in setting up a trust?

1. Generally, you (the “grantor”) establish a trust that includes all of your probate assets, and name yourself as both trustee and sole beneficiary for your lifetime.
2. You designate a back-up trustee who will step into your shoes when you can no longer serve due to death or incapacity.
3. You identify your beneficiaries, who will receive assets from the trust upon your passing.
4. For a trust to fulfill its objectives, you must then “fund” the trust by transferring legal title of certain assets from your name to the name of the trust.
5. As the grantor--provided you have capacity--you continue to manage, own, and pay taxes on trust assets during your lifetime. In other words, you do not need to file a separate tax return for the trust.
